

Face of Fillmore

An interesting thing happened to me this week that I think my readers would enjoy being part of.

I was reading Facebook and there was a note from Carl Aldrich from the Territorial Statehouse, wondering if I wanted to be part of "Fillmore Old and New". Sounds like something right down my alley so I agreed and have been delighted with what is happening there. Along with dozens of old photos of Fillmore and newspaper clippings were comments from a variety of people, some who live here in Fillmore and others who were residents in the past. I saw names of people I hadn't thought about in years and saw old pictures that I had not enjoyed before. It was like a reunion right there on my computer screen.

I found that this is very easy to locate even for people who are computer illiterate like me. Just go to Facebook and type in "Fillmore Old and New". It's just that easy and provides hours of enjoyment.

One of the purposes of the Face of Fillmore has always been to keep people interested in Fillmore's historical past and now here it is, right at your fingertips and there are hundreds of people interested. Last time I looked the total was up to 465.

I am including a few pictures I was interested in including one of the old elementary that was situated just south of the Territorial Statehouse with the district office building west of it, as well as an older postcard looking north down Fillmore's Main Street.
